

THE HALL-MILLS CASE

HM-4

By trolley Mrs. Mills rode to the end of the line on September 14, 1922, and wended her way down a dirt road in the general direction of the Phillips Farm, there to keep her tryst with Dr. Hall, who, according to witnesses, followed her in a few minutes.

Two days later the bodies of the minister and the choir singer were found at this spot, under a crabapple tree—since cut down—the woman shot three times and with her throat cut. Dr. Hall having a bullet wound through the head, while scattered over the still form were the torn bits of love letters which Mrs. Mills had written her lover.

Through the darkness, riding her mule, Mrs. Jane Gibson, the "pig woman," came upon a strange scene which sent her hurrying from the place in alarm, a scene that was afterwards to startle the country and create one of the greatest sensations.

It was the statements of Mrs. Gibson which opened a cell door for Willie Stevens, brother of Mrs. Hall, who with her, another brother and a cousin must fight for their lives within the next week or two against the state.

A Real Lady Divided Between Two Ambitions

A DEBUTANTE'S DAILY LETTER
The Most Entertaining Society Column in New York

New York, October 28.

Sue, dear:

What would you do if you had American political ambitions and a British title?

Which would you chuck?

That's what's bothering Lady Marie Louise Montague, and she's come to the conclusion that she'd rather hang onto her American citizenship and a remote chance of running for President than to keep in the direct line for the Montague peerage.

So she's dropped the Lady part of her name, except, of course, socially—it still goes at teas—and is content to be known as Dr. Montague.

Only Claimant

Three generations back the family tree of the Montagues got shifted some way. I never did get it straight—not the family tree, but the mix-up, and the eldest son of the eldest son hit out for West Virginia, where he pulled the lord of the manor stuff at Martinsburg, and built up the family fortunes in that comparative wilderness.

The title went right on through the other branch of the family, until now it's stopped with the present owner, without an heir to claim it. Lady Montague's the one who'll get the right to it when the present earl kicks off.

She has always been more or less interested in politics. Got part of the urge directly from her dad, Lawrence Montague, who spent forty years in the Internal Revenue Department of West Virginia. After having collected an honorary degree of Lit. D. and been made a member of the Intercollegiate Senate of London and editing a labor paper, with suffrage agitation as a side issue, she was made chairman of the Fourth Congressional District of West Virginia.

A Colonel, Too

During the war they gave her a uniform and the rank of honorable lieutenant colonel in the Signal Corps. Then she tried to reconcile church and state in the International Humanity League, and now she's playing around with the Democratic party. Tammany has her on its list of official speakers.

Every good little boy in these United States is taught that if he doesn't tell a lie and if he splits the kindling real nice he may grow up to be President. The girls aren't. But Marie Montague comes as near having a chance at it as any one around. Her name was brought up in a Democratic caucus of the powers that be, and they all let loose a lot of cheers when some one suggested that a woman might keep the party intact.

Maybe!

You can't always tell about those things, but at least a woman's name has been mentioned in the same breath with the White House.

Speaking of the Cherry Tree, Marie's some kind of a forty-seventh cousin of George himself. His grandmother was a Montague, and Marie can sport the same crest that Washington could.

Which in this day and age, means nothing at all.

Lonely Hearts

NOTICE—The Lonely Hearts Column serves as a medium through which lonely persons who write to The GRAPHIC may be introduced to congenial companions. No names will be published. Letters accompanied by a reference and inclosing a stamp will be forwarded to the proper parties. If you are lonely, write to this department and watch for your letter to appear in this column. While letters will be exchanged as promptly as possible, The GRAPHIC, of course, cannot be responsible when correspondents fail to answer. Address Lonely Hearts Column, New York Evening GRAPHIC, 25 City Hall Place.

A GAY WIDOWER

Lonely Hearts: I am a young widower of 24, and would like to meet a nice girl who likes outdoor sports. I do not dance, but I am sure that some girl between 18 and 22 will find me a good sport and entertainer. UNLUCKY BOY.

HERE'S A BLONDE

Lonely Hearts: I am a Protestant girl, college education, and would like to meet a young man around 30 who would be a congenial companion. Am 5 feet 7, blonde. As to good looks—that is a matter of personal taste, and I should like my prospective friend to be the judge in that matter. PEGGY.

STRUTS HIS STUFF

Lonely Hearts: I am an American, a college graduate. As I have been living in Europe for many years, I am without acquaintances here and feel quite lonesome and forsaken. Would any sincere, cultured lady like to get in touch with me? Will cheerfully answer all letters written by hand in English, French, German or Italian. VERSATILE.

Medical men are now indorsing the chlorine method, when only a

Your Birthday

OCTOBER 28

FANNY BRICE

Tomorrow is the birthday of Miss Fanny Brice, now starring at the Lyceum Theater in "Fanny," a play especially written for her by Willard Mack and David Belasco. As any one who understands the characteristics of the different signs of the Zodiac would know after seeing her on the stage, this gifted artiste was born under the rule of Scorpio, most magnetic and compelling of all the signs. It is great emotional force, which is so distinctive of Scorpio, that makes the artist and gives the touch of genius that separates the few from the many in all walks of life. Miss Brice is blessed not only with dramatic talent but with music, humor and the ability to discriminate and criticize her own work, and is never satisfied to give her public less than her best. Since her ruling planet is the proud and passionate Mars, she possesses initiative and resourcefulness as well as the energy and determination which, however gifted one may be, are very necessary for success. The position of Jupiter, who is on the best possible terms with the Sun, denotes the success that already has come to Miss Brice and promises still greater achievement in the future.

Scorpio gives a powerful nature. Its children are bold and confident. Like the Eagle, by which this sign is symbolized, they are capable of soaring to the heights and of exercising a tremendous power over others, but they also sometimes sink into the gutter. Scorpio brings many and varied experiences.
